BREAKING GROUND

New $3.5M fire station set to be ready in 2023

By Angelica Gonzalez Morales

DAILY JOURNAL STAFF WRITER

Edinburgh officials broke ground on last week on the new Edinburgh Fire Station 41.

Friends and family members came out to show their support towards the firefighters in the next step of opening a new station, on County Road 900 North. The town's fire operations will be relocated to this property from the current location at 203 S. Walnut St.

The project is expected to cost $3.5 million dollars. The town is funding the building with a BOT, or Build Operate Transfer, agreement. In this type of agreement, a developer funds and arranges financing for the project and when it is complete it becomes the property of the town. The town will pay back the financed amount over 10 years at a 2.5% interest rate, said Dan Cartwright, town manager.

The new building will provide more space for equipment and personal space for each of the firefighters. Following the decision a few years ago to have firefighters on duty 24/7, town council members wanted to make sure the firefighters have a modern living space with separate sleeping rooms, Cartwright said.

“Well, our firefighters have been living in really substandard conditions. It's a really old fire station, with no separate sleeping rooms, and it's just very jam packed so they were in desperate need of a new one,” Cartwright said.

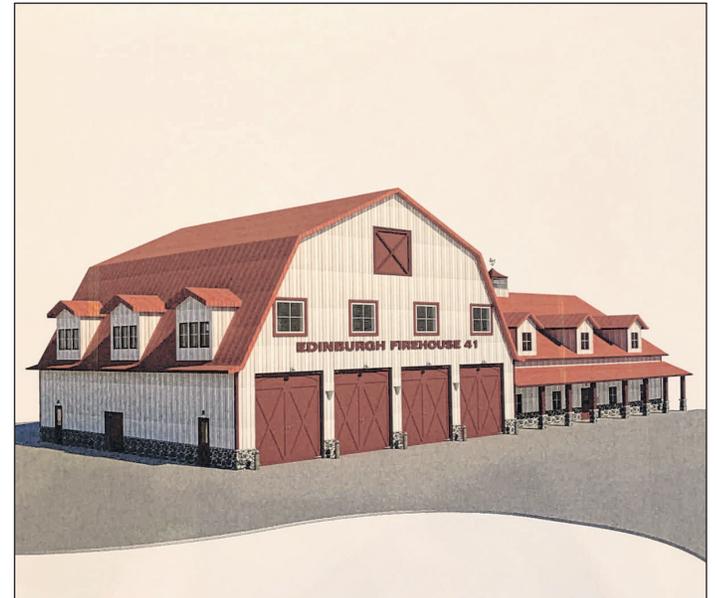

Edinburgh Fire Chief John Henderson said he is “truly overwhelmed” with the support the fire department has received for the new fire station.

“I couldn't be happier that the council has supported the idea of really giving these guys proper accommodations to consolidate our equipment and to make them feel more comfortable while working,” Henderson said.

The new accommodations are also likely to help with recruitment, Henderson said.

“We hope this is a recruitment opportunity, we've talked to other departments and they have invested like this as well and were able to recruit more,” Henderson said. “We hope that happens, we are going to start another fire training program in July to train some of our own.”

Along with Henderson many of the firefighters are glad the

Johnson County vehicle taxes won't increase, council votes

By Leeann Doerflein
DAILY JOURNAL STAFF WRITER

Vehicle excise and wheel taxes won't increase in Johnson County, as rates were approved to stay largely the same.

Last month, the Johnson County Council asked local highway officials to gather information on how a potential doubling of the rate might impact county residents. Though several members of the council said they would not be in favor of a rate increase, several members wanted to keep that option on the table to raise money for road funding.

Council members wanted to explore the option because county officials face $390 million in road work over the next five years — an amount well above the level of money that can be generated with the county's current road funding.

The vehicle excise and wheel tax are taxes charged on license plates. Money raised from the taxes is a funding source for state and local roads. The vehicle excise tax is charged for cars, trucks, motorcycles and small trailers, while the wheel tax is charged for large vehicles like dump trucks, semis and buses.

The county first established the taxes in 2008 and the rates were up for renewal this year, as the tax is set up to sunset after 60 months unless the council takes action to renew it. The idea behind the sunset is to allow the council to revisit the taxes periodically in the event state legislators change the road funding formula, said Luke Mastin, the county's highway supervisor.

The vehicle taxes were originally on the council's agenda last month as a simple renewal, until an increase option was suggested. The simple renewal is what was ultimately approved with a vote of 5-1, with council member Melinda Griesemer voting against it. Council member Rob Henderson was absent.

The county currently charges between $7.50 for motorcycles, $15 for trailers, $25 for cars and trucks and $40 for large vehicles. Those rates will stay the same for the next 60 months unless the council takes further action.

Officials had thoughts about a hike because a state law that was passed in 2017 allows counties to raise the tax rates to double the previous maximum rate, which was $40.

The current taxes raised a total of $4.24 million in 2021. Of that, $1.78 million was distributed to the county and the remainder went to the state. If the county had doubled the rates, that would have doubled the money for roads.

The council acted on the renewal at the meeting last week, though Mastin was not able to gather the information they had requested by the time of the meeting.

They had wanted to know the demographics of county residents who pay the taxes, particularly whether the tax increase would have an outsize impact on seniors. They had also asked Mastin to look at how the county would stack up to others if the tax was doubled or increased.

NEWS ROUNDUP

DAILY JOURNAL AND REPUBLIC STAFF REPORTS

Providers prepare for high-demand summer

An energy operator that delivers electric power to Indiana and 14 other states is warning of possible electric shortages this summer as extreme heat combines with increased demand.

Midcontinent Independent System Operator (MISO), an independent, not-for-profit organization that delivers electric power across 15 U.S. states — including Indiana — and the Canadian province of Manitoba, is warning that there could be a shortage of electricity during peak usage times, according to Johnson County REMC, the county's electric cooperative. JCREMC serves over 27,000 customers in Johnson County and portions of Morgan, Shelby, and Brown counties.

Any shortages are most likely to happen on days when extreme heat and humidity cover a substantial portion of the region. If the shortage reaches a critical stage, MISO will implement measures to curtail usage and preserve the integrity of the national grid, JCREMC officials said.

JCREMC is not the only utility warning of the possibility of shortages. The town of Edinburgh — through its electric utility Edinburgh Power and Light — is also warning of potential shortages.

While Edinburgh Power and Light is not anticipating any rolling blackouts, residents should be aware it is a real possibility. Officials believe that the town's electrical supply will be adequate for the high temperatures expected this week, Town Manager Dan Cartwright wrote in a Facebook post.

"The extreme temperatures this week will be a real test for our electric grid," Cartwright said.

With temperatures forecasted to be in or near the 90s this week, officials say conscientious electric use is critical.

The National Weather Service in Indianapolis is forecasting the high on Thursday to be around 92 degrees for Johnson County, and to be around 88 degrees on Friday. Throughout the Midwest and the South, high temperatures were expected to affect over 100 million people, the Associated Press reported.

Both Edinburgh and JCREMC officials are asking customers to help reduce the load on the power grid by running large appliances and charging electric vehicles during off-peak times. Peak times are generally between 2 to 8 p.m. daily, officials said.

Businesses and industries should conserve electrical usage as well, and customers should move thermostats up a few degrees to help reduce the load, officials said.

"Please set your air conditioner thermostats to what your least comfortable temperature might be," Cartwright said.

One position is open on the county's Convention, Visitor and Tourism Board. A qualified applicant must be a Johnson County resident or an owner or executive level employee of a convention, visitor or tourism business located in the county.

The second opening is on the Amity Fire Protection District Board. A qualified applicant must have knowledge and experience in matters pertaining to fire protection and related activities in the district. Applicants must also reside in Amity Fire Protection District and Needham Township.

To apply for one of the open board seats, fill out the Board Appointment Interest Form by visiting the Johnson County website at co.johnson.in.us. Station town council made it a priority to build the new station.

“Just overwhelmed, it’s just the kindness everyone’s shown us for our department, they really made an investment ... I know we have some needs and I know we have to grow with the town and catch up on a lot of different things,” Henderson said. “We can provide better service and for them to just make us a focal point and to invest in us is tremendous.”

Another benefit is the new station’s location. The current station is in heart of downtown, but it takes a while to get to commercial and industrial areas on U.S. 31 and Interstate 65. The new location is centrally located for fast access to both downtown and commercial and industrial areas. The amount of time it takes to get downtown will be further reduced when the town completes a planned Main Street extension project.

Construction on the station is expected start in July and the station is expected to be complete by May 2023, Cartwright said.
